COURSE DESCRIPTION

From the traditional emphasis on theory, methodology, and critical issues within a strict disciplinary structure, sociology has evolved significantly. The boundaries between Sociology and other disciplines have become more porous, allowing us to view the world through multiple lenses and discover and apply solutions to real-world problems. B.A (Sociology), also known as Bachelor of Arts in Sociology, is an undergraduate sociology programme. Sociology is the study of social relations, social stratification, social interaction, culture, and other topics. The Bachelor of Arts in Sociology degree programme is broadly defined as the study of society. The Bachelor of Arts degree programme in Sociology focuses on some of its specialised fields, such as Applied Sociology, Comparative Sociology, Cultural Sociology, Collective Behaviour, Crime and Delinquency. The course examines various aspects of the social world, such as the psychological nature of men and women and the barriers that exist between social strata. In other words, sociology is the systematic study of society, culture, and the interaction of various social levels. It also explains the relationship between various individuals, their experiences and their attitudes.
